The logos and trademarks were developed and registered within the original corporation called Vajradathu, Inc. in 1973 and have been passed on and held by or licensed to the many later name changes and related corporations that were developed over decades of experience. Trungpa Rinpoche died in 1984 and his position as head of the lineage was transferred to his son, the Sakyong Mipham Rinpoche who also had the requisite training and permissions to represent the lineage as a lineage holder.

In 2014, corporate machinations led to profound changes in the structure of the corporations the most notable of which for this case is the removal of the dual board structure … This was followed by a widely publicized scandal involving the lineage holder, Sakyong Mipham Rinpoche which prompted him to leave Halifax and retreat to his him and x in Nepal.

None of the charges made against the Sakyong in that scandal ever produced sufficient evidence to justify a viable lawsuit, let alone criminal charges, as all but one of the evidentiary documents that were produced were of second-hand reports alone of hearsay and of hyperbolic and near hysterical reinterpretations of trivial, perfectly legal mishaps and disputes in mature, adult heterosexual relationships (Exhibit "A," the Cameron Report). They were partly aggrandized through further hyperbolic insistence that religious leaders had a higher standard to meet in dating behaviors than the average public and that abuse could reasonably be alleged against any disappointment a partner of a religious leader might have due to teacher-student disparities in power and influence.

To make an analogy, it is as though anyone who had significant wealth could be held accountable for abuse for virtually any dispute or disparity that might occur with an impoverished partner.

The lack of evidence for the scandal prevented the Sakyong from being allowed to present his case in an impartial forum rather than one that was set to elaborate the trivial allegations and even add to them with a clearly decided bias against him from the start with an unquestioned "guilty until proven innocent" bias, to present witnesses and evidence in his defense, to be allowed to confront and cross examine his accusers through an experienced attorney, and to have an experienced judge to help clarify and elucidate the law to a panel of impartial jurors rather than a squawking mob of bumpkins hyped up on hearsay and mob mentality that is instead nothing but kangaroo courts and lynch mobs fueled by sexually deluded and power crazed would be usurpers of the Sakyong's influence.
