Sakyong Mipham Rinpoche, in preserving and presenting these long standing and well-established traditions of Tibet to Westerners, also need to be protected in their investment.

The recently affected break of Shambhala International and its related corporate entities from the lineage holder, the Sakyong, and the lineages he represents without any clear and verifiable "vote" or opinion by him on the matter coupled with actions he has taken to remove the rights and privileges of the lineage from Shambhala International entities for their having created "something new" in his words raises the question of the validity of the trademark licensing agreement as well as the current and future curricula of Shambhala international making it impossible to distinguish the authentic teachings as promoted and regulated by the Sakyong and those of Shambhala International, et al which may be or may already have been altered in a manner that violates the traditions and expected standards.
In short, in separating from the Sakyong and the lineages, they become mere admisers of those lineages and can do whatever they please and modify things as they please as the Sakyong and by that the lineages he represents, no longer have a say in the matter. This is indisputable from the language and requirements of the corporate documents, by the actions of the Sakyong in forcing the name change on Shambhala Mountain Center, the defrocking of the teachers and administrators of lineage names, titles, rights, and permissions, his statement that Shambhala International is now "something new" and distinct from his work.

The named Defendants represent the parties involved in the just mentioned trademark licensing agreement negotiated primarily between two corporations, Shambhala International, Inc. and the Sakyong Potrang, Inc, the latter supposedly representing the Sakyong and the lineages' interests yet lacking a vote or a clear and verifiable opition from him concerning the matter. These trademarks were originally developed by a Tibetan Buddhist Teacher, Chögyam Trungpa Rinpoche for the initial Buddhist Religious Organization he created in 1973 to sponsor and support his presentation of the Buddhist Teachings of the Kagyu and Nyingma lineages of Tibetan Buddhism for which he was a legitimate holder of the rights and permissions necessary to teach and propagate the teachings of that lineage and later for the Shambhala lineage for which he was an originator. The rights to these trademarks were passed on to his son within a corporate structure that gave the lineage holder the absolute power of veto or power of consent for anything that was done through the respective corporations, clearly indicating the intent and purpose of Trungpa Rinpoche and his son to preserve and protect lineage integrity through the actions of the lineage holder.
